Inspiring the Next Generation of Great American Playwrights

I first developed the simple process of turning outlines into stage plays and screenplays at UCLA Extension.

But the full ability to teach the process to others wasn't finally realized until the advent of the personal computer.

This unique play writing course uses the same reformatting process found in my course book: "Prolific Screenwriter."

This is both a How To and a Writing Faster Course. In this course, I teach Young Playwrights how to turn their outlines into the New York Stage Play Structure in five easy steps.

Understanding how to use this simple reformatting process will inspire your student to write more often, and will broaden their chances to become part of the next generation of Great American Playwrights.
